and this unfortunately prevented the gallant soldier from shewing his devotion to his British officer. (3rd class).

SUBADAR ABDOOLLAH KHAN, 3rd Punjab Infantry, on the same occasion, displayed undoubted gallantry by cutting down one of the enemy who jumped over the Sangar and attacked a sepoy of his detachment. Abdoollah Khan stepped forward to meet the man and after a short encounter killed him single handed and thus saved the sepoy's life. (3rd class).

JEMADAR BISSESSUR MISSER, 3rd Punjab Infantry. After the retire had sounded during the attack on the Bezotee Afridis position on the 11th March 1868, Capt. P.C. Rynd ordered Jemadar Bissessur Misser to charge the enemy's breastwork before retiring. In this attempt which was, however, unsuccessful, the Jemadar shewed great coolness and decision; he went to the front at once and encouraged his men to the best of his ability, and on retiring alternatively down the hill, he was most active in placing the men in suitable positions and contributed materially to the safe withdrawal of the party. The Jemadar was as cool under the heavy fire of the enemy as if he were on the parade ground (3rd class).

SEPOY MEET BUZ, 3rd Punjab Cavalry, was personal orderly to Lieut and Adjutant C.K. McKinnon, on the 11th March 1868, and behaved with great coolness and courage in carrying Lieut. Mc Kinuon out of action when that officer was wounded a short distance from the enemy. (3rd class).

SEPOY ZURREEM KHAN, 6th Punjab Infantry, was among the party that advanced to support the 3rd Punjab Infantry in the attack on the enemy's position on the 11th March 1868, and endeavoured to scale the rocks that surrounded the Sangar, and kept up a flanking fire on the enemy. He was lost sight of for a time, but shortly afterwards was seen trying to help himself down the hill, badly wounded. He could not reach his party but managed to get far enough to be protected by their fire, and when brought down, it was found that he had received a bullet wound on his leg and a number of sword cuts on his person: proofs that he had been in actual contact, single-handed, with the enemy. (3rd class) (657 of 1868)

AGRORE N.W.F.—1868.

HAVILDAR NOOR AHMED. } 2nd Punjab Infantry.
 NAIK MOSHUN ALI. }

During the disturbances in Agrore on the N.W. Frontier, in 1868, Mr. Geo B. Scott, Sub assistant of the Revenue Survey, while out surveying, was attacked by an armed body of 150 of the enemy on Pogurmung near the Frontier of Ullaie on the 11th August 1868, and was gallantly defended by a guard of 17 men of the 2nd Punjab Infantry, led by Havildar Noor Ahmed and Naik Moshun Ali.

The guard displayed excellent self-reliance and a cool determined bravery in very trying circumstances. It acted entirely unsupported in a country where the people were openly hostile, and, without the orders and guidance of its own European officers, it threw up defences, held them, and though far outnumbered, repulsed the enemy and not only saved Mr. Scott, but every particle of his baggage, although harassed through a long night retreat of 20 miles in an unknown and most difficult country. (3rd class). (7 of 1869.)
